the above will not work, categories is an array of objects, so i tried to do this my `Obj.categories.map(function(category) { emit(category, category.name); }, function(category) { emit(category.name, category.name); });` This works, but i'm getting a weird data set. I would like to get a data set like this `[1,2,3]` `[1,2,3]` `[1,2,3]` The reason for this is because I want to combine the name-value into a single array, i'm not sure if I can combine them into an array in Javascript A: You can do this in a single map function, which emits an object, like this: `myObj.categories.map(function(category) { var mapResult = {}; mapResult[category.name] = category.name; emit(mapResult); });` If you really need an array, try this: `myObj.categories.map(function(category) { var name, value; name = category.name; value = category.name; emit(name,` value); }); Then, in your reduce function you simply have function reduce(key, values) { var final = [];

values.forEach(function(value)
