Q: Problem with LaTeX I am using Ubuntu 14.04 LTS and did a system update yesterday without restarting the system. This morning, when I tried to open my LaTeX documents I get the following error: ! LaTeX Error: Can be used only in preamble of the document. I have no idea what to do. Can anyone help? A: I am assuming you tried searching your documents folder and found a file containing the word "preamble". If you did, and a file called "chapter1.tex" didn't have this, then the problem is probably that an upgrade (the pre-update) of your TeX software has broken it. The solution is (I assume) to downgrade your TeX. Open a terminal and type: sudo apt-get install texlive-latex-base Once the installation is complete, start a new terminal and go to your Documents folder. Inside you should see a folder called texmf. Inside this folder there is a folder called tex, which in turn contains a folder named installer (or something similar). Inside this directory you will find a file called tlmgr. Type "tlmgr" in your terminal, and the terminal will tell you what packages are currently installed. There's a list of available files. If you don't see a file called texlive-latex-base.installer, then one is probably not installed. Type "tlmgr install", and press enter. Now go back to the directory containing the texmf folder and type "tlmgr status". You should see if texlive-latex-base.installer is listed. If it isn't, type "tlmgr remove texlive-latex-base", press enter, and then type "tlmgr install", and press enter. If this didn't fix your problem, the only other solution is to back up your texmf folder (delete it and then re-create it with an earlier version of the texmf folder), and then reinstall TeX Live. Also, if you have a file in your texmf folder called "config", delete it, and then re-create a file called "config.local". This is probably the file your versions of TeX are reading now. Once it's fixed, try re-opening your file, if it worked. It will
