Chaises, spires, cerces, frettes, ellipses, aciers à déplier Plus Apple Software Update 2.Avelar, Avelar, 2013, Brazil Director: Júlio Bressane Avelar is a documentary about the experience of the young filmmakers who create their first film. This filmmaker's formative years make up the footage of this documentary. The film is set during the late 1990s and early 2000s, a time in Brazil when it has been noted that young filmmakers trying to make their names in cinema were being broken down by a system that 'trains' filmmakers into making films that do not pay attention to the demands of the general public. Although this film is at times melancholy, its only objective is to make connections between artists (Gustavo Bergarelli) and the Brazilian cinema industry. The film consists of a variety of interviews and events that aim to discuss how the artist's education through cinema has influenced him, along with the Brazilian cinema industry from the viewpoints of actors, directors, professors, producers and students. These events are followed by a montage of clips of films in which the subjects are discussed. The first event is a talk between a professor and a student at a university. The professor talks about how the work of a film is created and completed. We are then shown portions of the student's film, which has a purpose. It shows the student's process. The film is set up at the beginning of the semester and the professor asks the students which genre they will write about. The students choose the genre by choosing their own ideas. After the theory of the genre is established, the professor and the students begin the writing of the screenplay. The student film is shown as the final product of 595f342e71
