Let's say there are some objects. And I need to create another object with copy from already exist object. Example One object struct ObjectA { public int typeId = 0; public int id; } Another object struct ObjectB { public int typeId = 0; public int id; } And for this moment ObjectA and ObjectB are different objects. But now I need to create from these objects ObjectC like that: ObjectA a; ObjectB b; object c = new object(); c = new ObjectC(); //Some code for set ObjectC properties from ObjectA and ObjectB But it's important to copy in object, because after that I need return new c so that it's new objects. Questions: I mean that ObjectC should be new object How can I get these data from ObjectA and ObjectB? I know I can create object like that: object c = new object(); c.typeId = a.typeId; c.id = a.id; But it's not good for me because I don't need to copy properties. A: If you mean you want to have a "copy" of the values, you can just do this: object c = (object)a; The cast will throw if a is not an object, and the copy will be a reference to the instance of ObjectA that was originally passed in. A: In C#, object has a number of copy constructor. You can choose copy and

deepcopy. foreach (PropertyInfo property in typeof( ObjectC).GetProperties()) { if (property.CanWrite) { ObjectC copy = new ObjectC();

utility which is capable of opening almost all popular picture formats, including.jpg,.png,.bmp,.svg,.dwg,.wst, and.psd. The application has an easy to use user interface, a limited set of options and basic support for photoshop extensions. However, this simplicity does have a drawback: no features except image opening and viewing are supported. Redirecting to ../../libc/fn.pthread_cond_destroy.html ... location.replace("../../libc/fn.pthread_cond_destroy.html" + location.search + location.hash); #!/bin/sh # # An example hook script to check the commit log message take care of # 'Closes: #78' comments. The hook should exit with non-zero status after # finding the first such comment.

This is useful in cases where the commit # message is generated from a script, because such hooks are not run # automatically by 'git commit'. # # To enable this hook, rename this file to "pre-

What's New in the?

Scalable image viewer Image viewer using Qt Open almost any type of image fileShare this: FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — There are certainly some hidden gems among the 30 or so Boston Red Sox who suited up for their 20th anniversary season at Fenway on Friday night. For example, Jeremy Hermida. Or Daniel Nava. Or even Jonny Gomes. They were some of the hardest-working Red Sox who toiled away over 12-plus months of spring training, left-handers like Mike

Timlin and Cody Ross and then fans who clamored for that roster spot as their favorite All-Star slugger, Jon Lester, figured out his new role as a knuckleballer. They all got it done. And so, were they the ugly Red Sox of 2012 who played like the diminished club of the 2011 playoffs? Hey, the Red Sox celebrated the 20th anniversary of Fenway Park on Friday night with a 6-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins. It's been a long year for the Red Sox, who endured a gruesome winter and an even worse 2012 season. No matter who you asked to define the meaning of a bleak 2012, one answer would always be: Brick by brick, the Fenway rebuilding plan is in place. Most of those bricks are now in place. And even the bad ones, including the Jose Iglesias trade, were made a long time ago. The dust has settled on the terrible 2012 season and that rebuild, which started in late 2010, is nearly complete. Going into Friday, the Red Sox have had a winning season for nine consecutive years and reached the American League Championship Series in their past six consecutive years. It's been a nice run. But do they get tired of winning? There was no denying the Red Sox were up 2-0 in the seventh inning of Friday night's game. And Boston already had blown its season-opening lead, which was a tough pill to swallow. Red Sox closer Addison Reed gave up a solo homer to Matt Adams to bring up Blake Swihart, who came into the game for the second time in two nights to pitch. Adams delivered. Swihart was one out away from a three-run, walk-off home run that would have carried the Red Sox to a long, frustrating night. Swih
