A bit of new blood for Mr. Markov every now and then, in my opinion, will be a good thing. And yes, they are welcome to go the comedy route, but it must be done well, not by pastiche, but with pure focus and knowledge of your own style. I guess I can understand the focus on the action scenes to fight the shift to comedy, but I think that will hurt the overall mood in the movie, especially since they now have James Bond doing things that are meant to be more humorous. And on top of that, I don't really think that Jake Gyllenhaal will be able to pull off this tone, plus the fact that he may be the youngest actor in this film for this particular kind of role. And then, how much do we really know about the script? I have a feeling this might turn out to be a mishmash of various genres, that would be a hard thing to pull off. Or perhaps the original will be
