Roblox is an online game platform and game creation system developed by Roblox Corporation that allows users to program games and play games created by other users. Created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in 2004 and released in 2006, the platform hosts user-created games of multiple genres coded in the programming language Lua. For most of Roblox's history, it was relatively small, both as a platform and a company. Roblox began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 2010s, and this growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. As of August 2020, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16. Although Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, it has faced criticism for its moderation, microtransactions, and exploitative practices directed toward children. Whether it was for Y Combinator or not, I've always wondered what it's like to start a startup without a traditional business plan. While I don't start any startups myself, I see multiple talks at Google where it's abundantly clear that a lot of startups out there are doing things like location-based services and other very basic services—services that YC explicitly doesn't want to fund because the returns aren't high enough. Here's a thought experiment: pretend that you're a startup founder and that you want to run a location-based service. Think for a moment about how that would sound. Especially if you want to get funded—because Y Combinator wants to fund companies building a big consumer service. "If you want to get funded, you have to have proven that the market is huge." The problem with location-based services is that they can start out real small and focus on a small market. If you're looking to serve just one city and one apartment block in one building, then it's much easier to get customers to use your service. Compare that to a big-city internet company where you have to serve hundreds of millions of people. You need to serve a massive market that's not
