Roblox is a virtual world that lets players create their own games and play with friends. Users may design and develop their games on their own or collaborate with others. As of 2015, Roblox's server software handles around 40 million page views daily, providing over seven million bytes of data to its 1,500 designers. Although many of Roblox's games remain unsupported, over 8,000 games have been released in the Roblox Platform games database, providing a wealth of content for users to access. Roblox games are played using Roblox Studio, an online development tool that works on Windows, macOS, and other platforms. Roblox's background music is provided by Audionautix and Roblox Studios. Roblox Corp. is headquartered in San Mateo, California. In late 2018, it opened an office in London, England, its first international office. Being there since the platform started years ago, he will still have his questions about the framework he uses to build his ideas and all the tools and libraries he has to accomplish tasks that are related to programming. He will be an interesting person to know and would not miss the chance to meet someone with such knowledge. Casella will be the guest of YAPC::NA 2020. His talk will be about how to make maintenance easy in projects with a lot of contributors and how to handle corner cases. He will speak about the many ideas you can find in CPAN's ecosystem and how the system actually works. Alex gave a great talk on flambda, a language designed to make writing functional programmers fun! To be continued... I will be giving a talk titled "CasperJS: The eternal quest for a good scripting language" The talk will cover: How CasperJS got started Why/what is CasperJS and how it got started Tools CasperJS implements: CasperJS - a browser automation library providing functionality necessary to execute a given script in a browser Kiwi - an open source NodeJS script runner that provides a platform to write and execute scripts in JavaScript Nerves - a responsive frontend for working with CasperJS and Kawi CasperJS is a browser automation library, which enables anyone to write browser automation tests with nodejs. This extension provides a Rokos-Core object oriented API to interact with Riak via ROKOS. There's no dependencies required to use this extension. The included pdo_riak module has a class called RiakClient that abstracts the various methods of the Riak object orientated API in a generic way, and provides a common interface to the client. No Riak credentials are needed. Everything is stored within the Riak server connection parameters. The REST API and other Riak objects are made available under the ROKOS namespace. ROKOS uses an adapter pattern that provides access to Riak on a programmer language agnostic level. The documentation for ROKOS contains more information on how to use the Riak object oriented API. Thanks to the mbstring extension for not doing a costly database switch! Hope you find it helpful. Source: Riak is a popular open source object oriented database solution for the PHP world. self-management. Diabetes self-management is a critical component of diabetes care, yet there is little research to document the current practices of individual physicians. From 1993 to 1994, 15 primary care physicians voluntarily enrolled in a pilot project with the goal of improving the care provided to patients with diabetes through a process improvement effort. A comprehensive, behaviorally based, problem-solving process was used to support the clinicians in changing their behavior, which included the systematic identification, analysis, and implementation of problem areas. Implementation of the diabetes care process was associated with improved metabolic control as measured by glycosylated hemoglobin A1 levels, reduced frequency of emergency department visits, and increased physician satisfaction.
