Roblox.com is a website for the game Roblox. It was created in 2004 by a game programmer named David Baszucki and a designer named Erik Cassel. The website is intended to make it easy for users to program their own computer games. Users can create their own "virtual worlds" and allow others to play in their virtual worlds for free. Each virtual world is known as a game, which can be free, paid, or contained within a paid package. Players can earn Robux, a virtual currency, by completing in-game tasks or by allowing others to play their games. Robux can be used to purchase in-game virtual items that help players with their game or with their social experience. Robux can also be spent to watch Roblox videos and advertisements. At present, Roblox is based in the San Francisco Bay Area and has more than 9 million people around the world using it each month. Roblox is an entirely virtual universe, as players can not play the games directly on physical computers. It is not considered an MMO because games are not connected to each other, with no central server to manage them. The majority of the available games are single player, although some multiplayer games are also available, such as wars. Players create their own games and make them available to others. Before this was a feature of Roblox, it had been a feature of many MUDs, also known as Multiuser Dungeon Environments, during the 1990s. As of 2018, Roblox games can be programmed in the programming language Lua. Roblox's website states that "the site's programming allows you to create entire games right in your browser". The game is played using a drag-and-drop construction kit. The controls are based on the WIMP interface model, including an arrow keyboard input interface (QWERTY), a mouse, and a touchpad. Several independent developers that make games to be hosted on Roblox have created an alpha version of their own client-side game programming API. It is expected to be released in September 2019. Platform: There are three types of products created through Roblox. First, there are fully free online games, known as "Second Life" type games, which are created using the Roblox Studio or by downloading the Studio or by programming them with the Lua programming language. These games can be used and played completely for free. Second, there are free or paid game packages, which
