Types of Wedding Decorations and Their Storage Needs

Wedding decorations come in various forms, and each type has specific storage needs. Floral arrangements, for instance, should be stored in a cool, dry place to prevent wilting or decay. Dried flowers can be placed in airtight containers to maintain their shape and color. Table settings, including plates, glasses, and cutlery, should be wrapped in protective materials to avoid scratches and breakage. Lighting elements, such as fairy lights or lanterns, require careful handling, often needing to be coiled or stored in boxes to prevent tangling or damage. To streamline the process, categorize your decorations based on material and fragility. This approach not only simplifies storage but also speeds up retrieval when the need arises again.
