Understanding Print-on-Demand Hoodies

Print-on-demand (POD) refers to a business model that allows products, like hoodies, to be printed and shipped only after an order is placed. This means no excess inventory and minimal upfront costs for sellers. The process typically involves uploading a design to a platform, which then takes care of printing, packaging, and shipping directly to the customer. The primary advantages of print-on-demand hoodies are customization, sustainability, and reduced risk. Customers can select colors, designs, and sizes that suit their preferences, while sellers benefit from lower inventory costs and the ability to test new designs without financial commitment. This model not only promotes individual expression but also supports sustainable practices by minimizing waste.
